band do not live together. But a visit brings them again into the society of one another. Simultaneously the idealistic friend turns up.

Out of the varying views of this trio and its reaction on the children of the family the comedy is made. The successful man of business, capitally acted by Charles Dalton, ergotistically clings.

43,865. It was the biggest year in the museum's history as far as attendance is concerned, except 1909, when the Hudson-Fulton celebration brought crowds of visitors to the city and to the museum. The increased total is attributed to the growing appreciation of the museum's instruction and lecture service those who attended for such purposes numbering 189,873. The Saturday evening concerts, which have been supported by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., also brought many visitors, the average attendance exceeding 5,000.

Owing to the enlarged work of the museum and the higher cost of running it the museum had a financial deficit this year of $273,526. The cost of the museum's administration was $797,646, and the income applicable to this, in uding the city's appropriation of $300,000, was $524,120. The deficit was met partly out of private contributions and partly out of funds normally used for the purchase of works of art.
